Holy Rosary Review

A Foley artist is a craftsman who re-creates sounds for film, video, and other media in post-production to enhance audio quality. The artist replaces sounds that cannot accurately be recorded on set. Foley studios have viewing screens and props, as well as recording equipment to record sounds as they watch the film.

Holy Rosary's eighth graders wrote and filmed their own short movie scenes. They then performed custom-made sound effects for the movie. For example, the students poured water into a cup in which they had drilled holes to reproduce the sound of rain. They banged a rubber ball on a desk to replicate a heartbeat. Other examples included shaking a towel to simulate blowing wind, and banging a large, plastic container to mimic thunder.

The eighth graders recently completed a unit on sound and applied their knowledge of the properties and behaviors of sound to their videos. They filmed a scene and then inserted their original sound effects in post-production. The artists shared their films with their classmates and all got rave reviews. Titles of their productions were: Jungle, A Walk in the Park, Beach Day Gone Wrong, and Locked In.

Oscars could be in their futures, and we knew them when!!
